The Heavenly Guide. BY MRS. JUDSON. I gazed down life's dim labyrinth, A wildering maze to see, Crossed by meny n tangled clew, As wild as wild coubl be; And as I gazed in doubt and dread, An angel came to me.

I knew him for a heavenly guide, I knew him even then; Though meekly as a child he stood Among the sens of men— Iv his deep spirit-byeliness, I knew him even then.

Again down life's dim labyrinth I grope my way alone, While wildly through the midnight sky Black burrying clouds are blown, And thickly, in my tanglest path, The sharp, have thorns are sown Yet firm my foot, for well I know The goal cannot be fir, And ever, through the rifted clouds, Shines ant one steady star— From when my guide went up, he left The pearly guide ujer.

The remonstrances of M. de Coulanges only strengtheued my resolve to examine the ruin, and the matter ended, after some farther discussion, by my gaining my brother-in-law's reluctant consent to be the companion of my "foolish adventure," as he persisted in terming it "About three years ago, my parents, who

We set out on a pleasant afternoon in June, cure the key of the chatean from a peasant who lived at the foot of the hill, and who seemed to think us a couple of dunces to undertake a toilsome ascent with no other object than to stare at a ruined building. With renewed denunciations concerning my obstinger, we proceeded on the same of the figure of a young man, who evidently sought concealment among the trees, but did not succeed in hilling from my retice. and of course made it our first business to proions concerning my obstinacy, we proceeded on not succeed in hinling from my notice a very but and before very loug entered the large handsome face. For several days we met at our way, and before very loug entered the large gate, and stood within the court-yard of the castle. The dampness, the moss-covered walls, the trailing ivy, the falling stones, and rank growth of vigetation, combined to gratify my notions of the picturesque appearance such a deserted place ought to present. Turning the key, quite a shower of small stones fell around us, caused by the shaking of the heavy door. The staircases and rooms corresponded with the outward condition of the building. There was no furniture, nor any evideuce of the house ever having been temanted, until we reached a large apartment, where the remains of a few beuches, an altar, ith some tattered tapestry, and two eandles, we were warued by the lateuess of the hour and imdoubted indications of an approaching storm. This was more easily resolved upon than executed, however; and before long we found our selves involved in inextricable confusion among the numerous passages, similar in approaching to the confusion among the numerous passages, similar in approaching to the confusion among the numerous passages, similar in approaching the corresponding to the confusion among the numerous passages, similar in approaching the corresponding to the confusion and lights have also been placed in ghostly costume, and lights have also been placed in the castle windows."

Captail Harville listened to this account with even more interest, if possible, than myself, and at its conclusion, exclaimed that he could readily correspond to the castle windows. the numerous passages, similar in appearance, but leading no nearer to the place of exit. Each was equally certain that he could pilot the other, and each gave up in despair, when at last we reached a staircase in so dangerous a condition, that we feared to trust to its capabilities of supporting our weight. The storm was expensed assurances that her secret should be invisibly preserved. supporting our weight. The storm now commenced to rage with all the violence of a sudden summer tempest, and, when it ceased, the evening was much too far advanced to allow of any further attempts to find our way from the castle.

I must acknowledge that the prospect of spending the night in this solitude had something in it particularly fascinating to my youthful imagination, and I expressed this feeling in a manner not at all pleasing to my brother-inlaw, who had no romance in his composition, and much regretted his share in the business. Fortunately, a full moon was shining, which enabled us to select comparatively comfortable quarters, though a supperless couch on the bare floor was not the most desirable accommodation. of the whole affair to compose myself to sleep, and I was very glad when the deep breathing of

Some weeks after, while driving with a party of officers at Clermont, the conversation turned upon ruins, and I related to the company my adventure at the Chateau of Tournoille. They all seemed interested, but ridiculed the idea of any one really living in such a ruinel place, and several positively declared the whole story to be a delusion of my imagination. One of the gentlemen, however, Capt. Harville, joined me after dinner, and said, "I wish you would allow me to go with you to visit the eastle of which which you were telling us just now. Nothing would give me more pleasure than the oppor-tunity of spending a night there." To this proposal I, of course, acceded with great readiness, and that day week was the time fixed upon for the earrying out of our purpose.

My new escort was punctual to his appointment, and we set off in high spirits, taking with us provisions for a hearty meal, and also some defensive weapons, in case of au attack from the ghostly inhabitants of the ruined building. After reaching the eastle, we took a hasty survey of the premises, and then selected the room adjoining the chapel for our post of observation, and impatiently awaited the coming on of night. There was no moon, and the darkness was therefore as complete as we could wish in order to escape the probability of detection. My only fear was, lest we should see and hear nothing to reward our vigilance, and this fear had almost amounted to a certain disappointment, when light footsteps were heard, and shortly after the same sweet singing. Putting on slippers, which we had brought for the purpose, we stepped noiselessly across the floor of our room, and reaching the door of the chapel, we paused in silent wonder before the same levely vision which I had encountered during my former sojourn in the chateau. Some unconscious movement was evidently made by one of us, and she glided from the apartment as it startled by the noise. We determined to speak to her instantly, if another opportunity presented itself; and this had carcely been resolved upon, when she entered the chapel by another door, and approaching us, we, together, exclained, "Qui ctes vous?"

She turned, and ran with the greatest speed, and Capt. Harville and myself, each snatching On returning to the house, and inquiring of my brother-in-law, he informed me that the castle I had seen belonged to the family of Tournville, but it had been deserted and in ruins ever since his residence at Riom, and he knew not how long before. This scanty piece of information was quite enough to determine me to visit the old mansion, and accordingly I declared my purpose, and requested the pleasure of his course.

"About three years ago, my parents, who live in a neighboring village, sent me to Riom to board in the family of a friend, and attend It was soon necessary to retrace our steps, as

At the same time, we are told that these free State men are going, some time, and somehow, to do some very strikproposition not to vote at the ensuing elections. Now, if a majority of four or five to one can't vote now when an opportunity is offered to them in spite of the opposition of one, we should like to know who would trust them hereafter?

They propose to hold an election of their own; and to offer the Topeka Constitution, or, perhaps, a revised copy to Congress, in competition with the one made by a Convention call the Territory. Are they silly enough to suppose that the President or Congress will pay any attention to their disorderly and lawless proceedings? The next Congress will be made of other stuff. If a Constitution, ratified by the spite of them.

The reason for this advice to the free State men of Kansas, from the would-be great men who have gone there to take care of free dom is, that if there be a full vote, and the other, then their occupation will be gone. They will not be trusted any longer, whatever the result may be. All the qualities they have, would be of little avail in a settled community. If a State is made, of course they are doue As to the editors and advisers outside of Kansas, they have a suspicion that the majority there is against them, and that they may vote is best not to risk it; but to refuse to vote, be- eent is returning again. ing indignautly virtuous at the wrongs they have suffered, and that they apprehend. Kansas may become, in this way, a slave State; in deed, it will become so; and that will give them an opportunity to shrick again in 1860. Let Kansas go, if they can thereby get office and spoils. Indeed, this isthe very eard of the nigger-worshipers. Strange as it may seem to honest people, these Black Republicans don't want Kansas to be a free State; for they could then make no more capital out of bleeding Kansas

It has alluded in several instances to the resentment expressed by Southern papers in relation to Eli Thayer's schemes of colonizing Virginia with Northern Abolitionists. The Journal thinks the resist ance proposed to this impudent Abolition move ment, by a portion of the Virginia press, is man yesterday, according to an editorial, which "mischievous and outrageous." In order to jus tify this denunciation, it modestly assumes that, threats have been uttered against such immigrants "for the simple crime of removing to Virginia, purchasing lands at the prices at which Lines empeted by the death of Miss Kale L. Sibley, Virginians may be willing to sell, and quietly carrying on the business of agriculture within the limits of that State." Now the editor of the Journal cannot but avow that this Abolitioni-t Thayer only holds ont the low prices of land in Southern Virginia, and the profits to be made by agriculture and mechanical labor, as inducements to the proposed colonization. The great purpose to be accomplished, as he boldly avows, is to extirpate slavery from the State. He says expressly that he has selected Southeastern counties, for the reason that slaves are more numerous in that region, and that the Western portion of the State has much less of that description of prop erty, and is already inclined to anti-slavery sen timeuts. In fine, he anticipates that, through this means, the "gospel of freedom (as he term: it) may run and be glorified."

Now, does the Journal editor think it criminal in Southern slaveholders to become exasperated at such a proposition as this? Is it strange that they should even threaten violent expulsion from their midst of a colony of Abolitiouists. who come among them to preach the "gospel of freedom" to their slaves? for no disguise can conceal the means to be adopted in furtherance of the main object of this bold experiment on Southern forbearance. No sane man could have anticipated that such a scheme as this would be submitted to, and it was concocted for no other purpose than to furnish some plausible pretext for denouncing the violence of citizens of the South, and furnishing fuel to the anti-slavery fanaticism already raging with such fierceness in the Northead raging in the Northern States. There is no State or community in the South which does not welcome with open arms their fellow-citizens from the free States who come among them for legitimate purposes and with views consistent with their safety. This none will dispute; but those who come among them avowing objects fatal to their interests, and endangering the peace and safety of their families have no with to expect. lies, have no right to expect a very friendly

WEBSTER CITY, IOWA, April 12. Messrs. EDITORS: Three weeks ago to-day report reached us that the Indians had been ordering the inhabitants at Spirit Lake and en, well armed, left this place for Fort Dodge, At the fort two companies more had been formed, so that we numbered whont 75 men After twelve days' tellions march we arrived nt the Lake. Such a sight as we here beliefd may I never witness again. Father, mother, sister, and brother, lay as they had been show by the Sioux. We buried twenty-nine bodies From the position in which we found many of the bodies, there must have been hard fighting

I saw three persons who made their escape, badly wounded. Forty-five whites were killed, and four women were taken into eaptivity. A Mrs. Church, who escaped, shot one Indian. One little boy, only about eight years old, escaped from the Indians, and hid belind a log. As he went ont of the door, the Indian killed his mother, and the blood spattered over him. I could write much more, but do not like to think of the scene. They said there were about one hundred Indians. We expected to have had hard fighting, but the Indans left four days previous to our arrival. The U.S. soldiers from Fort Ridgely, arrived there only one day after the Sioux had left, but did not follow them only part of one day. We had creeks and ravines to cross where the water was from six to ten feet deep. We remained on the bank of a creek thirty-six hours without provisions or fire.

DEAR SIG: We, the understruct, the company and attaches of the Theorems. The company and attaches of the Mellus without expressing our grammatic of the Mellus without expressing our grammatic file. I'm a bachelor; yes, one of the despised race; yes, a garcon yungenfels hachelor. I'm a bachelor of thirty years' standing; a real, so- prober-sided, settled bachelor; but 'tisn't my fault; to no, 'tisn't my fault that I haven't been mar-

I was once, like most men, a little boy, with curly hair, played at my mother's knees, said my prayers, sang hymns, and, altogether, was a very good hoy (I believe this is what most persons say who are writing their own lives); but from the time that I was small, I always was oomed to have others find fault with whatever

If I had a toy-wagon, some one was sure to find fault with it—twas so weak—twas worth nothing—some one else had so much nicer one. If I had a rocking horse, it looked more like a dog. And, at last, when I purchased a "sureenough" horse, little, irreverent boys cried, "Oh, what a horse!" while disinterested friends laughed, and told me he was "sprung in the knee," until I, becoming chafed, swore I did it on purpose, and demanded to know-who would have a horse whose legs looked as if they were put up with a plumb! I concluded to turn farmer. I bought a farm. I had heard that rolling ground was preferable. I saw a farm that I thought was the thing; the house stood on a hill, at the very top, and I owned from the top of this eminence down to ows' Rest, Turkey Roost, Paradise Lost, and The Tower. I invited some young men to come and see me, and we would have a time of They came and went, but would never g o the house, swearing the hill was too steer One said 'twas a very good initation of the Rocky Mountain; another said, get married and make a "volcano of it." GOING HOME TO DIE WITH BETSY.

No other single alarm has so severely tried rom time to time, as the announcement of the struction of the world. Ever since the deluge here has been a suspicion in the minds of som onle as to the stability of sublunary things. In preto'd the destruction of the earth long before ne morable evert, and enforced his theor with considerable eloquence and power for a h indred years and upwards. He met with poor necess, and only convinced his own children that the storm was at hand. At a later period old Father Miller, with less eloquence, and no spernatural indications to aid him, enforced a eliefupon the minds of a hundred thousand peo de that the final dissolution was at hand, and exted suspicions in the minds of half of Christen om. Timid people who contemplate death in the ordinary way with a degree of complacency ook with awful forbodings to the end of th world. Of course hummu tastes differ in most natters; but there is no reason why mankind should be fastidious as to the manner of their 'taking off." In all human probability, those of as who are at maturity now, will realize the end of the world," so ier as we are concerned vithin the nineteenth century, and how can i affect our interests or enjoyments whether we o with the general tide or approach singly that undiscovered country, from whose bourn o traveler returns?" But the heading of thi et was not designed to inveigle the reader into ie pursuit of our morals; we thought to relate n ancedote of an honest bricklaver of this cit -the coolness and domestic fidelity of whom i worthy of imitation. A patriarchal specime of humanity, with a beard which hangs low pon his bosom, bearing a cross upon his short er, has para led our streets for some days, and ideed, seems to have become a fixture in our uidst, the admirers of Dumar styling him the "Wandering Jew." He has created no little onsternation among the ignorant and super titious, by reminding them of the long-forgat en past, and waveiling the mysteries of the fuare. Among other things, he asserted that on be 14th of April the world would be destroyed y fire; that snow would fall in the early par f the day, which would dissolve into oil; tha are would descend from above, and the earth rould melt away beneath the flames. And re enough we were visited by a heavy snow orm that very morning! A young man (s rm believer in the mysterious wanderer) in he cupley of one of our master bricklayers ntemplated the descending snow-flakes for ome moments in silence, and was observed t roplas implements of labor and start rapidl way from the half-constructed wall in the di ction of his home. His employer called to m for an explanation of his conduct, but our ero could not be induced to tarry. He was eard to say, however, as he quickened his pace that the world was to be destroyed that day, and he was "going home to die with Betsy and the

NOW AND THEN. We saw a young German lady and gentlema vorrying along up Market street yesterday afernoon. From their appearance at a distance we supposed the young lady was trying to push the young man off the side-walk; but as we eared them we saw how it was-each was at tracted to the other by the gravitating power of love. Dr. Fowler, in his phrenological chart If our head, expressed the opinion that we were "apt to putthis and that together and draw inferences," and in the indulgence of our prounny side of Market street, three years hence might contemplate a dilapidated specimen o the tailoring profession, jogging along with an laborate "meerschanm" between his treth, folowed by a youthful Schneider and a reckless colling rrow at intervals of half a square The little Schmiler and the interval are the d'fferences between now and then.

As one inhaled the balmy atmosphere of the evening, and, for the honce without his overement, enjoyed the quiet of this ene, the impression was irresistible that-

Soon after the celebrated Dr. Cumming wa censed to preach, he went to London, poor and unknown, taking with him a letter of introduc ion to a baker, whom he asked what he could du for him. The baker replied that they had a small church, but could not pay a minister; bu if he would stay a month with them, he woul board him. The young preacher assented, and said if they would give him the pew rents, he would always be satisfied. "Why," said the baker, "they will not find salt for thy porridge." The hargain still remains, and the popula preacher now receives £6,000.
